

King cooperates with the Oregon Extension to offer a fall semester in a renovated lumber-mill town in the Oregon Mountains. Students step “out of the mainstream” as they engage in intensive reading and discussion of four broad interdisciplinary themes while engaging in community building.